SPOTLIGHTS

FACULTY SPOTLIGHT: Justin Palanci, MD
Justin Palanci is an assistant professor in the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences. He serves as Medical Director of the Grady Assertive Community Treatment Program as well as Co-Director of Open Dialogue Atlanta, an outpatient program at Grady Behavioral Health. Within the department, he teaches and supervises trainees, is a founding member of Caring Communities, a member of the Diversity and Inclusion Subcommittee, and a member of the clinical service subgroup to address bias and racism within Grady Behavioral Health.

Justin is responsible for providing clinical supervision to the ACT advanced practice providers, providing direct clinical care, facilitating team meetings, and developing policies and procedures for program development with Grady ACT leadership. He provides educational workshops for program staff. For Open Dialogue Atlanta, Justin provides care to young adults experiencing psychosis through network meetings and medication consultations. He also facilitates a weekly intervision group on the approach.

Outside of Emory, Justin is a member of the Board of Trustees for the Georgia Psychiatric Physicians Association. He is a member of the planning committee on Racism, Privilege, and Socioeconomic Oppression within the Dialogic Community, which has held three national gatherings on the topic.

Justin enjoys working alongside many talented clinicians and staff who are dedicated to working with patients facing challenging circumstances. He appreciates the opportunity to teach trainees to think critically about psychiatry and their approach to patient care. He is grateful for the opportunity to share his experiences with Open Dialogue as it is a core aspect of his development as a clinician. He is passionate about continuing to collaborate with his colleagues on anti-racism initiatives within Emory and the dialogic community.

Looking forward, Justin is committed to continuing to develop and promote recovery-oriented practices at Grady Behavioral Health. He aspires to lead an effort to be the first program to implement an Open Dialogue model within the ACT framework. He plans to continue to be involved in efforts to bring Open Dialogue-informed care to the United States.

Outside of his work, Justin enjoys spending time with his wife, son, and pug. He enjoys playing golf competitively and looks forward to traveling again as the pandemic eases.

ADJUNCT FACULTY SPOTLIGHT: Peggy Flanagan, PhD

Peggy Flanagan is a psychologist and working predominantly in forensics for the last 10 years. She does work on the state and federal level and evaluate competency to stand trial, criminal responsibility and occasionally does evaluations for risk assessments and sentencing mitigation. In addition, she has a small private practice where she sees therapy patients and that’s part of what brings balance to her professional life.

Peggy has been privileged to work with this department as a therapy supervisor for psychiatry residents. It’s an absolute pleasure to work with such talented residents and help them connect to the therapeutic modality that works best for them. She often finds that the residents with whom she works enjoy the process of therapy much more than they anticipated, and that is a great part of what makes it so rewarding.

The process of supervision has been a steep learning curve for Peggy, and one of the parts she enjoys most is the connection within the Emory community. She has found the other faculty are so incredibly supportive, both interpersonally and with offering additional training and educational opportunities.

A surprising fact about Peggy is when she was in college she worked her way through school as a baker in a bakery. She can bake just about any bread, dessert, or treat - but she is terrible at cake decorating!
STAFF SPOTLIGHT: Arica Washington

Arica Washington is the Program Coordinator for PEACE for MOMS, which launched on December 1st, 2020. She is responsible for scheduling meetings, creating monthly reports, reviewing the budget, sending marketing emails and communicating with similar programs in other states. She answers calls from interested physicians and enter an encounter form so Dr. Goldsmith and Dr. Woo can complete consultations. She also manages Dr. Goldsmith’s calendar. Outside of the department, she has recently been accepted into the Mentor Emory program, so she will have the privilege of learning new professional skills as well.

Due to the pandemic, Arica does not currently have any roles or responsibilities outside of Emory, but she plans to resume volunteering within her community. She was previously involved with a youth development organization that mentored teenage girls, and she also assisted her cousin with her wedding planning business.

What Arica enjoys most about her work, and working in mental health in general, is seeing people seeking help because they aren’t feeling their best, and then being able to watch them improve. In her previous role at the front desk, she had a rapport with patients. In her current role, she gets to be involved in that process in a different way, which is still incredibly exciting. Knowing that she is playing a role in offering a service that previously didn’t exist in Georgia, and that this program will grant access to mental health care to more people has been a tremendous learning opportunity.

Right now, Arica’s biggest goal is to go back to school for her MPH. She loves reading about nutrition and gut health, so she would like to get certified in nutrition. When it is safer to be in group classes, Arica would love to resume her tap dance lessons, and maybe try a new hobby every few months. After spending most of 2020 in her house, she hopes to one day be able to travel more. The past year has shown her that anything can happen, so she will no longer be taking time for granted.

Outside of the workplace, Arica enjoys reading fiction novels, watching nineties sitcoms, learning about various health issues, specifically gut health and taking outdoor walks.

TRAINEE SPOTLIGHT: Jack VanBezooyen, MD

Jack VanBezooyen is a fourth-year general psychiatry resident at Emory University and is the chief resident for the VA service line. In this role, he is responsible for the coordination of weekly didactics, teaching, and mentorship of medical students and second-year psychiatry residents as well as redesigning the VA call schedule to introduce a night float system meant to improve quality of life and reduce burnout in residents.

In his time at Emory University, Jack has focused extensively on developing his psychotherapeutic skills through participation in the Emory University Psychoanalytic Institute and through receiving additional supervision in interpersonal therapy, acceptance and commitment therapy, time-limited psychodynamic therapy, behavioral couple’s therapy, motivational enhancement therapy and cognitive behavioral therapy for addiction. He is particularly interested in working psychotherapeutically with the addiction, dual diagnosis, chronic pain, and palliative care populations.

What drew Jack to the field of psychiatry and sustains his ongoing passion is the unique opportunity to build strong and longstanding relationships with his patients. He feels that to have the time to sit down and get to know someone on a deep level is a gift and rare occurrence in modern medicine. Furthermore, he feels that it is the relationship itself that is integral in alleviating the suffering of his patients.

Jack will be leaving Emory University next academic year to be closer to home and participate in an addiction fellowship at the University of California - San Francisco. He hopes to use the experience to provide care for patients suffering from comorbid psychiatric illness and substance use disorders, specifically for those populations traditionally underserved by healthcare systems.

Outside of work, Jack and his wife, Laura, love exploring the Atlanta food scene, running and hiking with their adorable new dog, Fizzgig, and having dinner parties with family and friends.

FACULTY DEVELOPMENT SUBCOMMITTEE UPDATES

Diversity and Inclusion Subcommittee (DISC)
Maha Shivaratri (March 11, 2021) – Sobha Fritz, PhD, Assistant Professor – “The Great Night of Shiva” tends to occur in February or March. What makes this celebration unique is that it occurs at night with fasting and meditation. It is a celebration of the night Lord Shiva performed his sacred dance regarding creation, preservation, and destruction. Devotees engage in prayers during an all-night vigil format.

Holi (March 28, 2021) – Sobha Fritz, PhD, Assistant Professor – Holi signifies the triumph of good over evil and is a celebration of springtime and love. This light-hearted and playful Hindu festival occurs in the month of March on the day of the full moon. There are many mythological stories that signify these themes as part of Holi. Festival goers celebrate Rangwali Holi in which people throw and smear colorful powders on each other, squirt each other with water, and share food and drink with friends and family.
