Please consider applying for a Graduate Mentor position with the Emory Pipeline Collaborative (EPiC)!

What is the Emory Pipeline Collaborative? What will you do?

EPiC is a health science education and multi-tier mentorship program for Atlanta public high school students. Graduate students are assigned to small groups that consist of 4-5 mentor/mentee pairs (HS student and Emory undergrad) and are responsible for teaching health science curriculum to their group. The curriculum is already designed. Graduate students also help facilitate the mentorship between high school mentees and their undergraduate mentors. The program has three cohorts, organized by high school grade, and aligned with the following themes:

- Sophomores: Human Sexuality and Reproductive Health
- Juniors: Neurology and Mental Health
- Seniors: Public Health and Health Equity

What is the time commitment?

- Attend two training sessions in the fall
- Be available for sessions that will occur on Wednesdays between 4-7pm from mid-January 2023 to April 2023

If in-person sessions are not possible due to COVID-19 guidelines, they will be conducted during that time on Zoom. The decision about in-person or Zoom will be made closer to the session start date.*

Who should apply?

All medical, graduate, and professional school students with an interest in health equity and mentorship are encouraged to apply. Pipeline is a great way to get more involved on campus, connect with the greater Atlanta community, and meet other graduate/undergraduate students!

Deadline

Application is now open and will close September 9th at 11:59pm.
